Arriving in London in 1851 to arrange the Montalban Wine Display at the Great Exhibition created by Prince Albert, Eduardo Garcia had been charged by Dona Adriana Montalban to bring her granddaughter to Spain. Bereft by the death of her aunts, and confronted by this autocratic stranger, Serena Montalban learned for the first time about her mysterious background. Should she go to Spain, meet the family who had disowned her father - and stay close to Eduardo? For a quietly reared Victorian lady, the decision was difficult...
